SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

It is reported that a telegram and a telephonic message from Brussels were recently received simultaneously over one wire at Paris. The system is the work of the Director of the Belgium Meteorological Bureau, Herr Van Kisselberger, and if successful must prove very valuable.

A peculiar effect is produced upon the workmen in a Russian bichromate of potash factory. The partition of the nose is attacked, a hole is eaten through it, and after a time it is totally destroyed, both nostrils being converted into one. An inspection has shown that about fifty per cent of the men employed have diseased noses, some having been attacked during their first month of work, while others have been employed ten years without being affected. The progress of this curious disease is entirely painless.

The first effects of small doses of arsenic taken from time to time are shown—by experiments of M. M. de Poncy and Livon upon cats—to be a fattening of the body, increase of appetite, and general appearance of improved health. This is soon followed, however, by emaciation, loss of appetite, anaemia, and death.

Remains of a remarkable bird of the Eocene epoch have been found near Rheims by M. de Lemoinne. The bird was at least ten feet high when erect, with a much larger skull than that of the ostrich, and affinities—it is believed—to the duck.

During a shower in the neighborhood of Paris 1,200 flashes of lightning were counted within a period of two hours.

A recent paper by Major Hallett gives instances of the remarkable results which have followed efforts to improve food-plants by a regularly continued practice of selecting the seeds of the best plants for planting. Vines, beetroots, cereals and potatoes have greatly improved under the system of selection, in some cases the annual yield per acre being trebled in a few years.

Several English collieries are testing blasting cartridges of caustic lime in place of the ordinary gunpowder or dynamite cartridges. The coal is broken by the expansion of the lime in slaking. There is no concussion, and the danger from flame and premature explosion is avoided.

Mr. Edward Muybridge predicts that in the near future the aid of photography will be sought to determine the result of all important horse races. With an invisible thread stretched across the track to operate a camera slide, it is a simple matter to photograph the animals in the twinkling of an eye as they pass the winning post. In the operation of this system there could be no "dead heats" on account of the disagreement of judges, as the record of the photograph would show with unerring accuracy the winner of the race.

An estimate of the quantity of sediment carried down by Chinese rivers indicates that if the deposit continues at the present rate the Yellow Sea will be converted into dry land in 36,000 years.

Colors fade under the influence of the electric light as in sunlight, but Mr. Decaux finds that the effect is weaker. With an arc light of 200 candle-power, the influence upon oil and water painting and colored wool seemed to be about one-fourth as powerful as sunlight influence.

The botanical literature of the Chinese is quite extensive and important, and dates back to 2697 B. C.

The size and weight of the human brain are absolutely greater than in any animals except the elephant and the larger whales. The brain of the elephant is said to weigh from eight to ten pounds, and that of a large finner whale between five and six pounds. Relatively to the bulk and weight of the body, the brain of man is excelled in size only in some small birds and mammals.

Two methods of utilizing the power of sea waves have been proposed. In the system of M. Gauchez, the rise and fall of a large float produce corresponding motions of a bell-shaped iron vessels by means of pulleys. As this vessel rises air is drawn through vales in its top and as it falls the air is forced through pipes into a compressing reservoir. By the other plan, suggested by Prof. Wellner, of Brun, a species of air-trap in the sea wall serves as an air compressor under the beating of the waves. Prof. Wellner produces motive power from the compressed air by running a pipe from the reservoir under an air wheel (resembling an overshot water-wheel) immersed in water. The air displaces the water from the cells and drives the wheel round while expanding and rising to the surface.

The electric light has before so important a feature in building operations that the Royal Institute of British architects is considering the merits of the various system with reference to architecture, and is trying to decide upon the expediency of requiring its students to pass an examination in physical science as a preparation for the study of electrical apparatus.

Garbaldi, in the course of his adventurous life, received wounds. The wounds in the neck and throat, at first believed to be mortal, were received in 1835, in Uruguay, in a sea fight against the Dictator, two wounds in the right arm at the sea fight of Rio Plata, in 1836—every officer and man near Garbaldi being killed or wounded; one wound in the abdomen, on April 30, 1849, while fighting against the French on the Janiculum. The wound was not dangerous but was excessively painful, and Garbaldi concealed his sufferings until the battle was over. On May 8, 1849, at Velletri, he was knocked off his horse by the Neapolitans, and trampled on. He received one bayonet wound and one sword wound, and was rescued by a band of mere boys who were engaged in the fight. On August 29, 1862, he was wounded in the thigh by one of the Royal Bersaglieri. A second bullet, rebounding, broke the ankle bone and remained in the wound. When extracted it exactly resembled in shape a cap of liberty. On July 4, 1866, on his birthday, Garbaldi was hit in the Tyrol by an Austrian bullet. It was a flesh wound in the thigh.

FICKLE MOLLIE.

BY JENNIE E. T. DOWE.

I think all day of Mollie, and I dream of her all night,
Yet I'm never quite contented even when she is in my sight;
For 'tis, "Ah, I love you, Jamie!" and 'tis, "Ah, I love you not!
Until, pretty, fickle Mollie, I wish you were forgot

She's a fair and lovely creature, the sweetest of her kind,
If she'd only be consistent I ne'er a fault could find;
But 'tis, "Ah, I love you Jamie!" and 'tis, "Ah, I love you not!"
Till I swear, fickle Mollie, I wish you were forgot.

My heart is tossed this way and that, my feelings ebb and flow,
Till, wild with joy and mad with pain, I know not where to go;
For 'tis still, "I love you, Jamie!" and 'tis still, "I love you not!"
Till I vow that fickle Mollie by me shall be forgot.

Oh! Mollie, Mollie, Mollie love! why will you tease me so;
For you I never can forget, your love can ne'er forego;
And though you love me, Mollie, and though you love me not,
Full well you know, O Mollie dear, you'll never be forgot.

DOT'S HUSBAND.

MRS. C. R. MINKLER.

Dot was married. Of that there could be no doubt, however incredible it seemed, for nurse Moore, promoted now to be housekeeper and head factotum up at "the Hall," waved the letter triumphantly aloft as she explained to the crowd of villagers who had gathered to hear the news.

Any other girl in Millfield might have married and nothing been thought of it, but Dot Mayne, the little elfish sprite whom all remembered in her christening robes, when the long name Dorothy, so solemnly pronounced by the minister, seemed so absurdly inappropriate to the short baby, that by common consent it was at once shortened to Dot; and after the death of the pale mother, who had seemed only lingering for her baby's christening, the motherless babe of squire Mayne, although the only child of a rich man, was adopted at once in every motherly breast in the village, and many were the startling suggestions as to the best manner of taking the child safely through whooping cough and measles, to which the Squire listened patiently. When Dot Mayne had numbered a half dozen years, the little fairy with her nimble feet and short bobbing curls, had danced her way into every heart and home in the village, and from that time on, she had been the pet of every man, woman and child, unless some months before or story opens, when the pretty willful ways had somewhat penetrated still deeper, even into the hidden corners of some hearts, as Nat Smith, the young telegraph operator could testify if he chose. But he apparently had no such intention as he paused a moment to see what the unusual commotion could mean.

"I say, Nat, Dot Mayne's married," said Ben White, the raggedest and most unmanageable street urchin in the village, "why she ain't a bit bigger'n I am," he added confidentially.

"Dot is nineteen," briefly replied Nat.

"Pshaw, now, you don't say, why it was only last summer she chased me clean around the square and catched me too by jingo, and shook me because I stoned Widder Thomas' lame cow. I tell you Nat, she's a reg'lar brick, and its too bad she up and married, but then I 'spose she found that tall, slim, young feller with black hair and eyes, that she use to be tellin' about, an' then of course she could not help it," he added apologetically, "you ain't sick be you?" he continued, for Nat's usually florid complexion had taken on a chalky hue, and he was grinding his heels in the unoffending gravel, while his teeth bit savagely at the stump of a cigar.

"No," he answered gruffly, and crushing his hat over his eyes he stalked on, not waiting to hear the closing clause of Dot's letter, which nurse Moore was reading aloud and which ran thusly:

"Our wedding trip is postponed indefinitely on account of papa's failing health, for although he insisted on seeing me happily married, I shall not leave him until there is some improvement, but you all will have an opportunity of seeing my dear Herbert, for imperative business summons him to Boston next week, and as he must pass through Millfield, we have decided that, although I cannot accompany him, he will stop a day or two and see about having some improvements begun on the house, and as I told you if they are complete in season, we will come down before Christmas and remain through the winter, as papa fears the ocean breeze through the cold months. You will of course receive dear Herbert in a manner befitting my husband."

"And that's all," said nurse Moore, folding the letter, "exceptin' some directions about airin' the rooms and beddin', just as if he might be weakly and take cold. I shouldn't wonder now if he was weakly," she added, "for tall slim, young men with black hair and eyes mostly is consumptive, and you know Dot always said she wouldn't marry any other," (a fact no one disputed, for Dot's Ideal was too well known,) "and he's a Southerner too and rich, one of the De Longs of Virginny," she continued, "and she says he'll be here on the noon train Wednesday. Now what I want to say is this, that of course if Dot herself came we should ring the bells and strew flowers and have a big weddin' feast, and she says," opening the letter with another flourish, "of course you will welcome dear Herbert in a manner befitting my husband," and so why we shouldn't have the weddin' feast anyway, and we might have a committee to meet him at the depot and give him a sort of welcome."

There was an assenting murmur among the crowd, and nurse Moore's suggestions were adopted on the spot, and a committee of citizens selected to welcome the stranger in a befitting manner.

When Nat Smith with a dispairing groan plunged so rapidly up the street, he came near running directly over a plump brown eyed maiden, who was coming almost as rapidly from the opposite direction, but Lottie Howard stepped swiftly on one side, and put out a plump brown hand on Nat's sleeve.

"Oh, Nat, have you heard?"

"Heard what?" he replied moodily.

"Of Dot's marriage; yes, I see you have," she said, "I am sorry for you Nat," her voice quivered a little over the last words.

Nat looked inquiringly into the soft blue eyes, now almost swimming in tears, and his own voice grew softer as he said:

"Why are you sorry for me, Lottie?"

"Because I knew, Dot told me—about—last summer."

"She told did she?" he replied savagely, "just like a woman; bragging of her conquests."

"Oh no, Nat, don't think that, Dot never bragged, only—only—she could never look at anything seriously you know. She was a sweet girl and I never blamed you, but I wouldn't let it trouble me too much if I were you," and as the womanly little figure flitted on down the street, the man stood looking after her thinking of the tearful brown eyes and wondering that he never noticed they were pretty before; and he thought with a little sigh of the day he told Dot Mayne of his love for her and begged her to be his wife.

Little more than half a year before our story opens, Nat Smith, sole operator in the dingy little office, with only the promise of an increase to his meagre salary, had, with many inward misgivings and an uneasy consciousness of the short comings in the matter of personal looks and lack of suitable wealth, laid his heart and hand at the feet of the lovely and willful little mistress of "The Hall," which offer was received first with an incredible stare, then a merry laugh so loud and long and hearty that the canary in the gilded edge cage overhead took up the refrain and piped in a shrill treble until the room rang again. All the while Nat stood humbly and nervously twirling his hat, with his naturally florid face several shades redder than usual.

"I don't see why you should laugh at a true and honest love Dot," he said, when she and the canary paused for breath, "you may have offers from richer men, I know, but none can love you better than I."

"It is not that, Nat, do forgive me for laughing. I don't care about the money, but the idea was so funny. Why you and I have grown up together, and—and—you are thick and large and have got red hair, and you know I always said I should wed one who was tall and slender, with black hair and eyes and high pale——"

"Spare me Dot from hearing that again," broke in Nat passionately, "if brains go for nothing with you, and all you care for is looks, then I suppose my hopes are in vain."

"And," continued Dot unheeding the interruption, "your name is Smith, Nathan Smith, of all names, I should die with such a name, now when your folks christened you why couldn't they have given you a Christian name?"

"And so you refuse me for the looks and the name?" replied Nat, "well I only hope you may not marry a bald-headed man with a cross temper that would break your heart," here Nat broke down utterly, and with the red of his face, changed to deadly white, turned to leave the room when Dot sprang to him and seized his hand in both her small white ones.

"Now don't be a foolish boy, Nat, or I shall be wretched. I shan't marry for years and years yet, of course, and I don't think you would care so much. Go and woo Lottie Howard, she likes you and she is good as gold."

And now that Dot was married and that dream ended for all time, Nat often thought of her parting words, for he had never dared trust himself in her presence again, not even when she started on that memorable visit to the sea shore, and now the whole seemed to come back to Nat, and all the afternoon two pair of eyes, one pair of heavenly blue, the other a tender brown, seemed dancing through the shadows of the dingy office, and the wires seem to click over and over again "as good as gold."

"Pshaw!" said Nat angrily to himself, "why should I be thinking all day of Dot's foolish words when they never entered my mind before. Lottie Howard is good enough but I shall love again, never."

Wednesday came and with it the noon express from W——, and a committee of three leading citizens of Millfield waited in solemn dignity on the platform until with sundry snorts and angry puffing the train stopped, and just as the brakesman called out "Millfield, twenty minutes for dinner," a tall elegant young gentleman, with black hair and eyes and diamond pin, stepped out of the car door and was instantly saluted by the three committee men as Mr. De Long, and in a polite little address cordially welcomed to Millfield, and invited to repair then and there to his future residence, "the Hall," to partake of a dinner gotten up for his special benefit.

The handsome visitor looked for an instant curiously from one to another of his invitors, and seemed for a moment just a bit nonplussed, but when he met on every side with smiles of recognition and little bobbing curtsy's of welcome from the children, he appeared to "take in" the situation, and in a happy and graceful manner thanked them and accepted the invitation.

While this was taking place the other passengers filed out into the depot dining hall. There were the usual number of drummers, a fat man and a lean one, a lame boy and two or three elderly business men, old and young women, and back in the car by the window, a man with eye glasses and slightly bald sat reading, but not one among them all could be possibly mistaken for Dot's husband.

"You see, sir," said one of the committee, waving his hand toward the group, "that we needed no introduction to you, for there is not a child in Millfield but could have picked out Dot's husband, knowing so well her taste, without her flattering description of you," to all of which the gentleman gave such pleasant and smiling replies as to quite win the hearts of the committee before they reached "The Hall," where nurse Moore presided in fluttering state.

"And how is my darling child?" she asked with a flutter of gratified pride at the friendly pressure of the aristocratic hand.

"I see you have got her diamond, sir," she continued, "many's the time, sir, Dot has telled me none should ever wear that ring but her future husband; I should have knowed you by that alone, sir."

The stranger gave the least perceptible start when she began, then glancing at the ring in question, a large and handsome solitaire, replied with emotion:

"Yes, my dear little wife insisted that I should wear it, and bade me by that token to give her best love to her kind and good friends here," bowing gracefully around.

The day passed pleasantly, and before night the conviction was gaining ground in the minds of all that Dot had done well, that is, all but Nat Smith who held grimly aloof and viewed the aristocratic stranger from a distance with an air of disdain, and when the next day the gentleman sauntered into Nat's office and requested a little business sent, Nat accepted his explanation that "Our house always dispatches in cypher," in silence, but after the stranger had gone he eagerly copied the strange words of the dispatch and locked them in his private drawer.

The second night of the stay of Dot's husband in his wife's home, marked an epoch in the history of Millfield, and it had enjoyed an honor (?) not often vouchsafed to small towns, it having been visited by burglars, and several houses plundered of money and jewelry.

Two of the houses belonging to two of our committee men, one of which had suffered a loss of five hundred dollars and the other one thousand, it being the habit of the Millfield folks to keep their money at home in default of a bank, until occasional visits to the city made it convenient to deposit. "The Hall" was also entered, and Dot's husband missed his diamond ring, valuable gold watch, and pocket book containing two hundred dollars. He had entered the breakfast room at an unusually early hour, with a harrassed air and asked nurse Moore if she had heard anything in the night. Nurse Moore remembered hearing his door open or close but supposed he was restless and had risen.

"No, I slept very soundly," he replied, "and did not waken at all, and this morning my pocket book is missing, also my watch and ring which I left lying on the table when I retired. It is incredible," he continued, "that the house should be burglarized and I not hear anything; do such things often happen here?"

But nurse Moore had sank helpless on her seat when he began, and could only stare in an idiotic way at the narrator, until the door bell rang violently and a boy rushed in with the alarming news that the village had "been robbed and all of Lawyer Dean's money taken, and would Mr. De Long please to come down and see if he could assist them any in gittin' a clue to the robbers?" at which point of the errand the messenger sank into a chair as breathless as nurse Moore.

The village was in a state of unusual excitement all day, and before night a detective from the city had been sent for, but as he could not arrive before the next day, it was suggested that a watch be kept to prevent a repetition of last night's doings, but Dot's husband, who had been the most active all day in trying to discover a clue, announced that "under existing circumstances his approaching departure should be postponed, as he could not think of leaving until the daring thieves were caught, a result he felt sure would be very soon, and in the meantime," he said, "let every one go quietly to bed, for burglars were never known to raid so small a town two nights in succession," and he positively forbade nurse Moore writing to Dot, as she proposed, lest she should be unnecessarily alarmed; directions in which the head men heartily concurred, for it was already tacitly acknowledged in the village that the ruling spirit was that of the new proprietor of "The Hall."

Nat Smith, who had listened carelessly to the foregoing, sauntered back to his office, and for lack of other employment fell to studying over again the curious message sent the day before, when the object of his speculations entered the office again, and after carelessly explaining that owing to his "lengthened stay his business would need fresh attention," wrote another curious dispatch, with the request that it be sent immediately.

The message contained but half a dozen words, among which were "four bells," and these words Nat fell to studying as he had the other, when suddenly, with a muttered exclamation, he seized his hat and strode after his departing visitor.

That night the inhabitants of Millfield slept in peace to be awakened at an early hour with the astounding intelligence that Dot's husband was at that hour in jail on the charge of committing the robberies of the preceding night.

"What!" "when?" "how horrible!" "how ridiculous!" etc., were some of the expressions heard on every side, and nurse Moore went into spasms of indignation when the one policeman informed them that "Nat Smith had suspected and watched De Long, and upon his attempting to leave privately, traveling-bag in hand, on the four o'clock train, had him arrested on suspicion, and the valise was even now in the hands of the proper authorities undergoing inspection," and, he added, "there comes the seven express with the detective on board, so this 'ere business will soon be settled."

His surmise proved correct; the detective at once identified the prisoner as a notorious cracksman long known to the New York police as "Gentleman Dick," and for whose arrest a large reward was out, which in due course of time our friend Nat received. The stolen property was all found in the prisoner's valise, and the aristocratic stranger reposed quietly in the strongest cell of the village jail awaiting trial, while the Millfieldites united in bewailing the unfortunate fate that had thrown Dot under the influence of so fascinating a man.

"It will kill my poor girl," moaned nurse Moore, which assertion no one could gainsay; but by common consent a telegram was at once sent, and Nat Smith set his teeth hard, as under his skillful fingers the wires clicked off the message, "Mrs. De Long, your husband is here, under arrest for burglary. Come at once."

Dot could not arrive before the next day, and so the villagers waited again, this time in tears and doubt, with nurse Moore at their head, the coming of the noon express, and as the cars stopped and the lithe, graceful form sprang from the step into nurse Moore's outstretched arms and the tear-wet face hid for an instant on the broad motherly bosom a silent groan went up from every heart; then lifting the piquant, defiant face with a haughty gesture, Dot looked around and said:

"Good friends, it is all some dreadful mistake; my husband is from one of the oldest and proudest families of Virginia, and I am sorry this dreadful thing has happened. I didn't dream I was sending him, poor dear, as a lamb among lions," here the red lips quivered, "but, of course, you don't understand; it will be all explained presently;" then with another defiant little nod, she demanded, "Take me at once to my dear Herbert."

The procession that filed down the village street was so different from the one of a week before, that neither the genuine sorrow all felt for Dot, nor the garrulous explanations of nurse Moore, could quite hide the comical side of the question. After reaching the jail, Dot, with nurse Moore, were admitted at once to the prisoner's cell, and after staring a moment at the handsome occupant, Dot reiterated her command of "Take me to my dear Herbert."

"Why, there he is," explained nurse Moore, who was viewing the scene with a sardonic smile.

Dot turned disdainfully. "That is not my husband; I never saw this man before; where is Herbert, I say?" but nurse Moore had collapsed, sank on the floor in a state bordering on insanity.

"Do you mean to say that he is an imposter?" she shrieked, "that he has fooled us into giving the best victuals and the best bed in the house, while all the time he was planning to rob and murder us in our beds. How dare you do it, sir?" she demanded of the culprit, who all this time was standing quietly with the sardonic smile deepening on his face, and when nurse Moore broke down utterly under the magnitude of her wrongs he bowed politely to Dot, who looked slightly bewildered, and said in the blandest manner:

"Allow me to explain, Madam, and pray excuse this masquerading. It was not my fault that I had the honor of being taken for the husband of so lovely a woman," another low bow. "In passing through this village on the train, I stepped from the car with others for the purpose of getting my dinner, when I was immediately claimed and welcomed as Mr. De Long, and thinking to enjoy a little sport, I did not undeceive them, as after all, the sensation of being 'lord of the manor' for a little while, and having a wife and home made ready to order, was rather a pleasant one, and as you may imagine the garrulity of this good woman furnished me with all necessary particulars, besides," he continued, "the situation offered such unparalleled opportunities for the pursuance of my vocation, that I could not resist the temptation. Pray forgive me, madam, and I abdicate in favor of my successful rival, whom I presume was the elderly gentleman with eye-glasses, who came on the train with me. I discovered that his name was De Long from its being tacked conspicuously on his traveling-bag, and as he was reading when the train stopped, I infer that he was so absent minded as to forget his destination." After which explanation, given in the most perfect manner, with the most fascinating smile and another graceful bow, which quite mollified nurse Moore's ruffled temper, the gentlemanly thief heaved a deep sigh and stood looking at his fair visitor with a melancholy air, until the door closed between them.

"Don't you feel uneasy about your husband, deary?" questioned nurse Moore, when Dot's old time happy laugh rang out once more, while explaining the mistake to the friends who crowded around when they were once more in the steeet.

"Oh dear, no," she replied, "Herbert is very absent minded, and I've no doubt but he forgot his plan of stopping until well past the station, then concluded to go on, transact his business, and stop on his return."

"And to think we all made sure he was your husband; and, oh dear! he has your diamond ring," said nurse Moore, stopping short, "how did he get that, I should like to know?"

"My ring?" Dot repeated. "Ah! that explains. Our boarding house was burglarized last week and my ring was among the missing; I am so glad it can be recovered."

At that instant the up-train rounded the curve, and with a despairing snort stopped at the little platform, and Dot eagerly watching the descending passengers, gave a little cry and ran forward to be received in the arms of an elderly gentleman, slightly bald, with eye-glasses, who looked rather bewildered at this sudden onslaught.

"You did not expect to meet me here, did you, dear?" Dot cried, with another hug, then beginning to sob hysterically. "Oh, Herbert! they said such dreadful things, and—I was so frightened." With which lucid explanation Dot's sobs changed into a laugh, while the innocent cause leisurely took off his glasses, put them on again, took another look at his wife as if to assure himself it was no mistake, then throwing a protecting arm around her, glared defiantly at nurse Moore, who was bobbing little curtseys, and demanded:

"Ahem, madam, who has dared annoy my wife?" then seeing no one was inclined to explain, "Dorothy, my love, couldn't you be a little more lucid in your explanation?"

Nat Smith, who from a distance had watched the whole proceeding, smiled grimly when he saw Lottie Howard coming down the street.

"Lottie," he called, "have you seen Dot's husband?"

"No, Nat; has he come yet? Where is he? Wasn't it the queerest mistake?"

"Look there!" he replied, indicating with a wave of his hand, the party on their way to "The Hall."

Mr. De Long, but half mollified, still glared defiantly through his glasses, Dot clinging flushed and happy to his arm, with nurse Moore proudly leading the way.

"Oh, Nat, that is never Dot's husband," said Lottie, and they both laughed.

"There's no accounting for tastes," said Nat.

"No," replied Lottie, wondering in her heart how any woman could refuse the man at her side, and Nat looking curiously at her must have read her heart, for the next month a special license was issued for the marriage of Nathan Smith and Lottie Howard.

THAT WAS IT.—"Sir!" began a Detroiter as he entered a grocery the other morning, "Sir! I ordered some butter of you yesterday."

"Yes—ah—I know; meant to have sent it up, but forgot it. You shall have it right away."

"Sir! the butter came up on time."

"Oh—ah—it did, eh? Well, I'm sorry it was poor, but we shall have some better in a day or two."

"Sir! the butter came up on time and was all right; best I've seen in a year."

"You don't say so! Certainly—just so—I'll make up the weight on the next lot."

"Sir! the butter was good, the weight correct, and I called to order six pounds more."

"Is it possible! Well, I do declare! Then that was it! Well, well, but accidents will happen in the best of regulated groceries, you know. Sorry, but will do better next time."

A stingy family: "But why did you leave your last place? asked Mrs. Brown. "Och, mum," replied the young person, with a toss of her shapeless head, "they were that mean that there was no livin' wid 'em. If you'll belave it, mum, 'twas only yister that I wint intil the parlor and there was two of the gurruls a playin' on one peeany and their father rich enough to buy a dozen and niver fale it!"

THE "JOLLY GIRL" IN ENGLAND.

The women who copy the ways of men at best succeed in resembling boys. The special habits and interests of men, their athletic and sporting tastes, their melancholy experience of what is called "life," can no more be appropriated by a girl than our topboots and riding breeches. She only approaches that unnatural monster, the boy who is aping a man. I am not so old or such a misanthrope but that I find myself at times among young people at a dance or a garden party. I see a handsome young fellow from Aldershot talking to a fine girl, the picture of youth and grace. "They are flirting, I hope, as they should be," says a match-making old thing. Flirting! my dear lady, he has been telling her about that awfully jolly run with the Quorn, don't you know! And now she is asking him with an anxious look if it is really true that No. 7 is not fit. For an hour, as I sat within hearing on the bench, she has patiently committed to memory the merits of barrack after barrack and station after station—a form of feminine curiosity which he has but languidly satisfied, though he has no other topic with which to entertain her. "Aldershot," says he, "is such an awfully jolly place, don't you know?" "Is it really?" says she, with feeling. "I mean, says he, "such a jolly place to get away from." And she knows who is bound to win the mile race unless Jigger Mowbray can stand the training, which is not to be thought of, don't you know. And so they go on, from mere habit, talking the talk of the smoking room, or so much of it as can be dribbled into the ears of a pure young girl. By all that is sacred, I glow with shame when I see a beautiful woman thus put off her sex, when she certainly can never put on ours.

What are they to gain, these favorites of the regiment and the hunt, that they thus humble themselves, that they so disfigure and weary themselves in laboriously ceasing to be women? It is not husbands, assuredly, they are seeking. Our young friend from Aldershot does not trouble himself to flirt with girls he has not the remotest idea of marriage; nor indeed, has his fair partner, at least with the like of him. She is not thinking of fascinating him at all, would, indeed, that she were! Marriage is an affair of carriages and horses; for these she must look to older men, and she does not like older men. No! She is only filling her appointed part—the awfully jolly girl—which her society expect her to be. Dolly and Darling, Judy and Joe, have to do it, and so must she.

I wonder if she knows how little men really care for this strange receptivity of hers. To the young fellow this girl with her manly acquirements just so far ceases to be woman without advancing a step toward man. She listens to him as the fag at school listens to the big fellow in the boat or the eleven. It is pleasant to him that the young 'un wears skirts and has lips ruddier than a fag. It is pleasanter to him, but not wholly to us elders and fathers.

Girls in my time expected us to treat them on the assumption that they were women, or that they very soon would be. If we could not entertain them as women all the world over love to be entertained, they turned to one another and amused themselves. When we sat with a sweet young thing in the veranda as the band played the last notes of Kathleen Mavourneen we had something, I vow, to talk about besides cricket averages, the club cigars, and the right cut of a bulldog's ears. And as we never saw cigarettes in the lips of our partners, it never occurred to us to smoke between dances.

I have no turn for satire, but I love to watch our social moods and to trace them to their causes and effects. I suppose the work began with that wave of athleticism which of late has swept over the land, turning the heads of not a few lads and importing some laughable customs; but if its effect upon men was more or less manly and wholesome, its effect indirectly on women was perhaps a more doubtful gain. When the gymnastic idol was set up and the muscular type of virtue became the whole duty of man, there were found English girls to suppose it the whole duty of women. Physically, it may be, it strengthened those whom it did not slaughter outright. But as the girl could only join in the new worship as a proselyte of the gate, she fell into the social position of the "lower school" at a cricket match. The jolly girl, in fact, became a fag. When athletics are the business of life, the tone of society is naturally set by men.

Was not the second cause at work in the triumphs of the famous American beauty? This fascinating being I doubt not, on her own side of the Atlantic has planted the germs or new feminine epochs. There was nothing of the playground or hunt about her; her important discovery was the freedom of her sex. It may be doubted if our ancient system on this side of the ocean is duly prepared for such dash, such originality, such ongelic self-possession. The type, however brilliant, is a perilous one to adopt. For the American girl, who so startles us at home, has her own traditions and habits. When she shook from her airy skirts the conventionalities of the old world, she founded those of the new. At home she reigns still, and imposes her law on men, concerning herself but little about mess rooms and gun clubs. Young ladies, you who think of adopting her adorable freedom of manner, be sure that you also adopt her shrewd and original spirit.

But, be the causes whatever they may, the result is a curious social inversion. The relative place of men and women is reversed in this rapid and dazzling world. Of old, the idea was that in things social the woman was mistress, queen and leader. Men in her presence were to study her tastes and submit to her law. If they could not exist without tobacco, they might go elsewhere; if they wanted to be killing something, to a shooting party; and the matches discussed in a drawing-room had nothing to do with Lord's.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The following clause was found in the will of a Yorkshire rector: "Seeing that my daughter Annie has not availed herself of my advice touching the objectionable practice of going about with her arms bare up to the elbows, my will is that, should she continue after my death in this violation of the modesty of her sex, all the goods, chattels, money, lands, and all other things that I have devised to her for the maintenance of her future life shall pass to the eldest son of my sister Caroline. Should any one take exception to this as being too severe, I answer that license in the dress of a woman is a mark of a depraved mind."

CABIN LOVE SONG.

BY J. A. MACON.

Oh, listen to me, darkies,
I'll tell you a little story;
'Tis all about my true love,
De Flat Creek mornin'-glory.
She's nice as any jew-drap
Inside de open flower,
She's soft'er dan de moonshine,
An' I lubs her eb'ry hour!

CHORUS—Mag is a sunflower,
Mag is a daisy;
Mag is de very gal
To run a nigger crazy!

Her head is like de full moon,
Her lips is sweet as a cherry;
Her forrud's smoov as a lookin'-glass
An' slick as a huckleberry;
Her face is like a picter,
Her teef is white an' pearly,
Her eye is bright as a lightnin'-bug,
An' her ha'r is 'mazin curly!

I like to chop de 'backer-patch
Wid Mag right close behind me;
I'd like to be a 'backer-wum
Ef Mag would only find me;
I'd like to be a flock o' sheep
Ef Mag would dribe me 'bout,
I'd like to be a 'tater-slip
Ef Mag would set me out!

I seed her for de fus' time
In thinnin' out de corn;
She made my feelin's flutterate
An' now my heart is gone,
Oh, I lubs her like de mischuf,
I's bound to tell her soon,
An' I'll cote her at de shuckin'
Or de changin' ob de moon!

ARTEMUS WARD'S LAST JOKE.—Artemus Ward had a great longing to come to London and give his lecture at the Egyptian Hall. That longing was destined to gratified; but it was the last. He thought "The Mormons" would do very well, and it did. He knew his lungs were affected, and he knew he must die; but he did not quite know how soon. He came here in 1867. He was soon unable to continue his entertainment. "In the fight between youth and death," writes his friend Robertson, "death was to conquer." His doctor sent him to Jersey; but the sea breeze did him no good. He wrote, genial and sympathetic to the end, that "his loneliness weighed on him." He tried to get back to town, but only got as far as Southampton; there many friends went down from London to see the last of him, two at a time. Hingston never left him, and the Consul of the United States was full of the kindliest attentions. A wealthy American had offered the Prince of Wales a handsome American-built yacht. "It seems, old fellow," said poor Artemus, as he made his last joke to Hingston, who sat by him—"it seems the fashion for every one to present the Prince of Wales with something. I think I shall leave him my panorama." His cheerfulness seldom left him, except when he thought of his old mother, and then he would grow terribly sad. But the end was at hand. "Charles Browne," writes his friend Robertson in modest but feeling terms, "died beloved and regretted by all who knew him, and when he drew his last breath there passed away the spirit of a true gentleman."—Good Words.

For a long time, says the St. James Gazette, the alarming height of the heels of women's boots has been a source of deep anxiety to her many friends and admirers, but it is generally felt that any remonstrance with her on the subject would only irritate her. An action was brought in London the other day to recover compensation for personal injuries, and was defended on the ground of contributory negligence. The plaintiff was a butcher, who, with his wife, went on board a steamer belonging to the defendant for a short sea trip. While stepping on board the vessel the plaintiff's wife slipped and fell, breaking her leg. A question was raised in the course of the inquiry as to the height of the heels of her boots. She described them as being not very high—about the usual height. A medical witness expressed his opinion that the heels of the boots worn by plaintiff's wife were not very high; but admitted that high heels led to accidents, and in some cases "conduced to injury of the spine." In the end the jury found a verdict for the defendant.

Without doubt, the richest newsboy in the country is Mike Mykens, of Denver, Col. He is supposed to be worth at least $50,000, which he has invested in Denver real estate. He is not yet ready, however, to retire from business, but from early morning until midnight may be seen upon the streets crying, "Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Kansas City morning papers." In connection with his paper stand he has a boot-black's chair, which he generally leaves in charge of an assistant. He sells his papers at a uniform price of ten cents each, and long experience has made him very expert in detecting at a glance from what part of the country any one of the strangers who throng the streets of Denver hails. "Run after that old man with a white choker and sell him a Boston Herald," he will say to his assistant; or "work off a San Francisco Bulletin on that slippery looking cuss under the awning." Mykens is no longer a boy, but he is likely to remain a newsboy for years to come.

During the last national fete in France when every city and village in France was decorated in honor of the taking of the Bastile, the parish priest of Cessy, in the Department of the Ain, created some sensation by pulling down and destroying the tricolor flag hoisted on the presbytery by the Mayor of the village. Since that date the priest, Verroux by name, has spent most of his time in being tried by various courts, which seemed unable to decide whether, in trampling on the national flag, the unpatriotic priest was guilty of an offence against the act which forbids the mutilation of "objects intended by the authorities as a public decoration." Each court came to a different decision on this knotty question, until the Tribunal of Grenoble finally settled the matter by mulcting M. Verroux in a fine of sixteen francs and expenses.

"Waking the dead" has for centuries been and still is practised in one of the northern Scotch counties. A house with a corpse in it becomes, for the two or three days between death and burial, the rendezvous of the neighbors, who sit and tell stories—particularly ghost stories—ostensibly to dissipate the grief of the bereaved. Such gatherings, which are largely attended by young lovers, differ from Irish wakes in that the Scotch bring their own tobacco and pipes. The people of this district are all free church and free drinkers. Whiskey abounds. Great offence was given by a teetotaler substituting milk, and it is opined that there will be few mourners at the next funeral in that house.

GUITEAU'S DEATH WATCH.

THE ASSASSIN NEVER OUT OF SIGHT OF HIS GUARDS.

Guiteau's death warrant was signed last Monday and put into the hands of Warden Crocker. The Warder read it carefully through and then placed it in the safe. When he has endorsed upon it the notice that he has obeyed its command and has returned it to the clerk of the court, the last legal formality in the case will have been finished. The condemned man has been perfectly calm. The eyes of the guards are continually on him, a punishment which he at first seemed to dread more than death; but though he makes no move that is not seen, and though as he turns over on his cot he meets the never-ending stare of the silent guards, he now seems to have mastered the repugnance which such ceaseless watching first occasioned. If he is conscious of this vigilance he conceals it well. The day has been very hot outside, but the breeze that blows from the eastern branch of the Potomac cools his cell, and he seemed not to be disturbed by the heat. All accounts that come from those who see him agree that he seems convinced that he cannot escape the sentence of death, even temporarly and this knowledge does not seem to have had any other effect upon him than to induce constant meditation. He reads the Bible and other religious works, and he spends an hour or more reading the several accounts of the evangelists of the crucifixion.

While he is thus occupying his time, the prison officials have been engaged upon the gallows. The officers of the Washington jail have had experience in hangings, and no novices will take part in the hanging next Friday. It was suggested that the drop as previously arranged was awkward, though effective. When the unknown executioner hidden in the cell receives the signal from the Warden, he will twitch a little rope, which withdraws the bolt that sustains the drop. The drop, or platform, has heretofore fallen in front of the condemned man, thus concealing the lower part of his body. Monday this was changed, and when the prisoner falls, on Friday, the drop will swing backward, and the body will be fully exposed to the jury and officers. These changes were made silently. No one in the jail knew what was being done. No noise penetrates Guiteau's cell, and he neither knows nor has desired to know anything about the arrangements for his death.

Those whose duty it will be to put him to death feel very great interest respecting Guiteau's condition on Friday morning. Some of them still fear that he will be semi-conscious, while one or two fear a painful and exciting scene. Born of of the real or simulated raving of a madman, one or two of the guards have seen some indications which lead them to surmise that Guiteau is planning to execute something painfully sensational. But his counsel, Mr. Reed, and his religious visitor, the Rev. Dr. Hicks, have seen nothing to lead them to doubt that he will go the scaffold quietly. Buoyed by the conviction that he is about to die a martyr's death, Mr. Hicks says he cannot now reconcile Guiteau's conduct, and his unwavering faith in the inspiration which led to the death of Garfield with any theory which makes him a wholly responsible man. It is probably understating the matter to say that many members of Congress seriously doubt his responsibility, though they are nearly all careful to add that this question was finally settled on the trial. With the jail officials the hatred and anger which could hardly be restrained when he was first taken to the jail has succumbed to a feeling of pity, and they all now speak of Guiteau in terms of compassion.

"When I see him in his cell quietly reading his Bible, or kneeling in silent and apparently earnest prayer at his cot every night and morning, or conversing calmly upon religious subjects with Dr. Hicks, and yet always defending his act of murder and on religious grounds, it set me to thinking pretty deeply," one of the guards said.

The strangeness of it all, his remarkable religious bearing, his calmness and seeming confidence in the future, have impressed all the guards. One of them aid that he had watched several condemned men, and had observed in general a similarity in their conduct, but as he looked at Guiteau he could not bring himself to realize that this man was being subjected to the death watch.

It is very difficult to obtain any description of Guiteau's appearance. The guards and others who have seen him say that he has changed little, or that he looks precisely as he did at the trial, barring the excited, wild look that at times was then observable. He seems to like the food that is set before him. He is fond of his bath in the morning, of his stroll in the corridor for exercise, of his nap in the afternoon, and is scrupulously neat in his person and surroundings. At times, and particularly in the morning as he dresses, he is heard humming hymns, and snatches of ballads.

When Guiteau has been hanged, science will probably be called to bear testimony that could not be given during his life. The microscope's story of the revelations made to it by his brain will add a chapter to this case. It may be that the microscope will reveal nothing. Even if he be insane, the exposed brain might not reveal the mental disease. Madmen's brains have been subjected to the most powerful microscopes, only to present the same appearance as those of a man who died in full possession of his mental faculties. But some of the physicians are firm in the belief that an autopsy will reveal disease. At all events, the tests will undoubtedly be made.

Speaking yesterday of the decision of the Cabinet in his case, Guiteau said to the Rev. Mr. Hicks: "Don't go to President Arthur any more. Let him come to you. I have nothing more to ask of him if he has irrevocably decided. I appeal to the higher court. God will judge between him and me."

The matrimonial aspirations of Lea Hale and Katie Morgan were opposed by her parents at Chattanooga, Tenn. She was kept so close a prisoner that all plans of elopement failed, as she was not allowed to go beyond the veranda of the house. At length Hale made up a party of friends, including a minister, and approached the house near enough to signal Katie to come out. The obliging clergyman had shortened the marriage ceremony for this occasion to a few words, and it was supposed that these could be spoken before any interruption occurred. The girl was caught on the veranda by a big brother, and in escaping from him fell down the steps, bruising herself considerably; but the ceremony was successfully performed, amid the cheers of a multitude.

The Colonel, who lives in the South, was finding fault with Bill, one of his hands, far neglect of work, and saying he would have no more preaching about his place—they had too many protracted meetings to attend. "Bill ain't no preacher," says Sam. "He's only a 'zorter." "Well, what's the difference between a preacher and an exhorter?" "Why, you know, a preacher he takes a tex', and den he done got to stick to it. But a 'zoster he kin branch."

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The Democratic Convention, met at Harrisburg yesterday and nominated Robert E. Pattison, of Philapelphia, for Governor, on the sixth ballot. James H. Hopkins, of Allegheny, and Ecley B. Coxe, of Luzerne, were his chief competitors. Harman Yerkes named General Davis of the Doylestown Democrat, and the General received 10 votes on the first ballot. On the sixth ballot the vote stood 126½ for Pattison and 119½ for Hopkins. A platform was adopted, which is a remarkably weak production. As the New York Tribune says "About all there is of it that is not unjustifiable denunciation is bald platitude. And it is as silent as the grave in regard to the tariff." After the nomination for Governor was made, the Convention adjourned until to-day, when Lieutenant Governor, Supreme Judge, Secretary of Internal Affairs, and Congressman-at-Large will be nominated

—The question of prohibition is likely to give the Democrats more trouble than it will the Republicans in Indiana this fall. The Republicans have taken the ground that the people ought to have an opportunity to vote upon the prohibition amendment to the Constitution, without declaring as a party for against it The Democrats have, however, declared themselves against the amendment and against allowing the people to vote upon it. But some of their candidates for the Legislature have said that if elected they will vote to submit the amendment to the people. Much confusion and discord is likely to grow out of this state of affairs.

—The record of DeLong settles one point which has been used to criticise Melville—that he could have saved him had he promptly gone to his rescue. The date of his death is proximately fixed. His last record was made October 30, and he probably died within a few hours of that day. It is evident from this fact that the utmost exertions or greatest promptitude on the part of Melville would have been of no avail. From the time he had reached succor till DeLong's death did not admit of rescue.

—The only opponent Alexander H. Stephens will have in the Georgia Democratic Convention for the Gubernatorial nomination will be A G. Bacon. Mr. Bacon announced himself as a candidate before Mr Stephen's name was mentioned. He shows no disposition to withdraw from the field, but, on the contrary, has recently written a letter in which he makes a vigorous attack upon Mr. Stephens as the candidate of a cabal.

—An effort is making to bulldoze the State Credit Democrats in Tennessee into voting for Bate, the nominee of the repudiating wing of the party for Governor. The Louisville Courier-Journal, which has denounced the Repudiators for months, is throwing its influence in favor of Bate and urging all Democrats to support him. It is doubtful, however, if the State Credit men can be persuaded to go back on their record and vote for the candidate of the low tax faction.

—James Hill, once a slave and now chairman of the Mississippi Republican State Committee, has been visiting Chairman Jewell, of the National Committee. He expects the election of two Republican and two Independent Congressmen from that State in November. He reports that white planters are becoming Republicans, and takes a most hopeful view of party prospects generally.

—The Bourbon Democracy of the South is profoundly anxious that the next House of Representatives should be Democratic. There is not much use in electing men by tissue ballots and false counting, if there is to be a Republican House of Representatives to detect and reject the fraud. The Democrats must control the House or the fraud will come to grief at the critical point.

—The Philadelphia Record, the Democratic daily of Philadelphia, damns its candidate for Governor with faint praise. It says Mr. Pattison is by no means the best representative Democrat whose services might have been commanded by the Convention, but it would have been easy to have chosen a much weaker and in many respects a less available man.

—General Weaver is reported to be attracting large audiences in Texas. The wild scheme of flooding the country with irredeemable paper money, which the Greenbackers advocated a few years ago, is conspicuously absent from his speeches. He now goes in for a currency made up of gold, silver and full legal tender greenbacks.

—Hon. George Lear says he cannot be driven into the Democratic or Independent Republican ranks. We presume that he intends to support the regular Republican ticket that he helped to make, notwithstanding the remarkable letters he has given to the public.

—The Reading Times and Dispatch thinks "so-called 'independence' in politics is after all only a kind of political measles, breaking out virulently, but really a harmless disease."

MARRIOTT BROSIUS, ESQ.

Marriott Brosius, Esq., who has been nominated by the Republican State Convention for Congressman-at-Large, to fill the vacancy on the ticket caused by the declination of Thomas M. Marshall, was born in Coleraine township, Lancaster county, in 1843, and, after receiving a common school education, entered the Law University at Ann Arbor, Michigan. Before completing his course the war broke out, and Brosius enlisted, in 1861, as a private in the 97th Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was promoted from private to corporal on June 79, 1862, and again promoted to sergeant May 6, 1863. He was a gallant soldier, and was severely wounded in the arm at the desperate fight at Bermuda Hundred, Va., May 20, 1864. This was followed by issuance to him of a commission as second lieutenant, but he was never mustered into his new position, and was discharged on a surgeon's certificate on January 2, 1865. He is still partly disabled by his wound received in the service of his country.

He has ever since the war been a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and has been a frequent and eloquent orator at their camp fires and reunions. He is also a pronounced advocate of the temperance cause, and a frequent speaker at meetings for its promotion. He occupies a high position at the Lancaster county bar, and has tried many important cases. He has never held office, but has always been an active worker in his party, and a brilliant and effective stump speaker.

IOWA FOR PROHIBITION.

The friends of Temperance have won a signal victory in Iowa. That State has committed itself by probably 40,000 majority in favor of absolute prohibition of both the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The vote was taken on a proposition to amend the Constitution of of the State as follows:

No person shall manufacture for sale, or sell or keep for sale as a beverage any intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine and beer. The General Assembly shall by law prescribe regulations for the enforcement of the prohibition herein contained, and shall hereby provide suitable penalties for the violation of the provisions thereof.

The proposal to submit such an amendment to the people was made first by the Republicans of the State at their convention in 1879. It at once met with general favor, as both parties were eager to have the troublesome question removed from politics. There has been no partisanship in its advocacy during the past few months in which it has been before the people, leaders and newspapers of both political parties cordially advocating its adoption. The size of the vote in its favor surprises even its friends. As might have been expected, the majority comes almost entirely from the rural portions of the State. The cities, with the exception of Des Moines, voted strongly against it.—Tribune.

—The Democratic State Convention of Maine met in Lewiston and renominated Harris M. Plaisted for Governor by a unanimous vote. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the political assessment system; demanding civil service reform; denouncing the Republican party for turning the administration of the Government into "an oligarchy of office holders, perpetuating itself by the corrupt use of money, protection of monopolies," etc., declaring for a reduction of the tariff and the fostering of the ship building interests, favoring the substitution of greenbacks for national bank currency, the abolition of imprisonment for debt, the exemption of wages for personal labor from attachment, and the making of ten hours a day's labor in all branches of business. The following Congressional nominations were made: Samuel G. Anderson, First District; Daniel H. Thing, Second District, George W. Ladd, Third District, T. H. Murch, Fourth District.

—The Democrats of Pennsylvania went through the form yesterday of nominating a State ticket. Mr. Pattison was selected as the candidate for Governor. He is an honorable gentleman, who has done some good work in exposing the iniquity of the McManes Ring in Philadelphia, but beyond that little is known of him. His nomination for the chief office in the Keystone State will be a surprise, even to himself. He is unknown beyond the municipal limits of Philadelphia and his nomination will give no strength to the party in the State. The Democrats of Pennsylvania can always be depended upon to make fools of themselves.—New York Herald.

—The Congressional Convention in the XVIIth Ohio District, which took 355 ballots without being able to nominate a candidate for Congress, adjourned without any preparation for meeting again and a new convention will have to be called. On the last ballot Updegraff had 76 votes, Hollingsworth 44, and Taylor 42. Had the convention met the next day Mr. Updegraff would doubtless have been nominated. It is thought that in choosing delegates for the new convention the practice of pledging them to favorite candidates will be abandoned.

—The Portland (Or.) New Northwest, a female suffrage organ, speaks hopefully of the new Oregon Legislature, saying: "Known opponents of female suffrage who have been elected are few in number, and it seems impossible that enough objectors will be found among the uncommitted candidates to prevent the endorsement of the pending amendment. Women have no cause to fear as to the action that will be taken next fall."

—The Easton Express warmly urges the re-election of Congressman Mutchler, declaring that "he is as popular in Bucks and Lehigh as he is in Northampton, for he has served his constituents everywhere with satisfaction to them and credit to himself."

—In Oregon the Democrats said the Chinese must go. When the time to go came around it was the Democrats of Oregon that went.—Lincoln (Neb.) Journal (Rep.)

DE LONG'S DIARY.

THE LAST DAYS OF THE ILL-FATED NAVIGATOR.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—A report has been received from Engineer Melville at the Navy Department giving the details of finding the bodies of De Long and party. The details differ little from those published. The copy of De Long's note-book sent contains very touching records of the sufferings of the party during the last days. On October 5th he writes: "A half pound of dog meat per day is our food until some relief is afforded us. Alexy went out hunting again at 9 A. M. Mortification set in again in Erickson's leg and he is sinking. Amputation would be of no use. He is partially conscious. Alexy came back, having seen nothing. I think we are on Titary Island, and about twenty-five miles from Ku Mak Suka, which I take to a settlement, and this is our last hope. As soon at the storm abates shall send Ninderman and one other to make a forced march to Ku Mak Suka for relief. At 6 P. M. served out one-half pound dog meat and went to sleep." On the 6th he writes that Erickson is dead and the hunters have come back empty-handed, and adds, "what in God's name is to become of us? Fourteen pounds of dog meat left. To dig a grave for Erickson was impossible, so a hole was cut in the ice of the river and he was thus buried, three volleys being fired over his grave and a head board placed on the bank bearing his name." On the 7th he writes, "Breakfast consisted of our last ½ pound of dog meat, and our last grain of tea was put in the kettle this morning. Our journey of 25 miles is now about to be undertaken with some old tea leaves and two quarts of alcohol. However, I trust in God, and believe He who has fed us thus far will not allow us to die of want now."

October 8th he says "Breakfast one ounce of alcohol in a pint of hot water. The alcohol does great good in keeping the men up and preventing gnawing at the stomach." That day they made but one mile, striking a river and being obliged to turn back. On October 10th he writes. "Last one-half ounce of alcohol. Eat deerskin scraps. Yesterday morning ate my deerskin footstraps. Built a fire and made a drink from the leaves in the alcohol bottle."

On the 12th he writes: "Breakfast, last spoonful of glycerine and hot water. For dinner we had a couple of handsful of Arctic willow in a pot of water, and drank the infusion. Everybody getting weaker and weaker: hardly strength to get wood. Southwest gale, with snow." October 13th: "Willow tea. Strong S. W. wind. No news from Ninderman sent ahead to look for settlements. We are in the hands of God and unless he relents are lost. After crossing river missed Lee and sending back found he had lain down, wanting to die. All united in saying the Lord's prayer and creed. After supper, strong wind; horrible night.

"October 15th—Breakfast, willow tea, and two old boots. Alexy, the hunter, broke down, also Lee; came to empty grain raft, halt and camp, signs of smoke at twilight

"Sunday, October 17th—Alexy broke down, divine service.

"October 17th—Alexy dying. Doctor baptised him and read prayers for the sick. October 18th—Mild, snow falling; buried Alexy in the ice of the river, covering with slabs of ice. 19th—Cutting up tent for footgear. 20th—Sunny but very cold. Lee and Koch done up. 21st—Koch found dead about midnight between doctor and myself. Lee died about noon. Read prayers for the sick when found he was going.

"October 22d—Too weak to carry the bodies of Lee and Kock out on ice. The doctor and myself carried them around a corner out of sight, and then my eye closed up. October 23d, 133d day—Everybody pretty weak. Slept or rested to day, and then managed to get enough wood in before dark. Read part of divine service. Suffering in our feet No foot gear. October 24th—A bad night. October 25 and 26"—No entries save writing of dates.

On the 27th he writes "Iverson broken down. October 28th, Dressler died during the night." The last entry is as follows: "Sunday, October 30th, 140th day—Boyd and Gratz died during the night. Mr. Collins is dying."

—The Special Naval Committee, of which Commodore Walker is president, appointed to consider the feasibility of removing the remains of Lieutenant De Long and his comrades to the United States for interment, has submitted its report to the Secretary of the Navy. It will be made public to-morrow. It is understood that the committee regard the project as inexpedient, but that they make no recommendations whatever. According to the plan proposed by Lieutenant Danenhower it would be necessary to remove the bodies to Orenburg by sledges and then by rail to St. Petersburg. The remains could be properly embalmed there and then easily transported to this country. The winter season is regarded as the best time for carrying the plan into execution should it be decided upon. It is estimated that the removal would cost from $20,000 to $25,000.

—Mr. Blaine's new house in Washington, now nearing completion, will be one of the most imposing private residences in that city. It will receive light through seventy large plate glass windows. On the first floor are two halls, respectively fifteen and twenty feet wide, running through the house at right angles with each other, and five rooms, about twenty by twenty-five feet each in size, all of which, by sliding doors, can be thrown into a single suite. The interior woodwork of the house is of walnut, mahogany, poplar and oak.

—One night recently two children of William Montgomery, who keeps a hotel at Larimer Station, near Greensburg, were burned to death by the explosion of an oil can. The youngest, aged 9 years, got hold of the can during the mother's absence, and began to pour oil on the fire.

The Republican party of Pennsylvania is now passing through a trial very much like that it was called to pass through in 1872. Let us look back at the condition of things politically, in the latter year, when Hartranft was our candidate for Governor, with a State ticket, including three candidates for Congressman-at large.

From the time the campaign began, in that year, we had but two friendly papers in Philadelphia, the Evening Bulletin and the North American. The Press was then bitterly hostile to Hartranft, as it is now to Beaver, and supported Buckalew actively until election. It was venomous in its hostility, and all the vile slanders upon Hartranft, which then obtained circulation, had their origin in the columns of that paper. It was, at that time, the principal morning paper of Philadelphia, and it went over all the railroads, into all the western, middle and northwestern counties, and we had not a single daily morning paper to circulate against it, or to counteract its influence. The Inquirer was either indifferent or hostile, and the North American had an almost exclusive mercantile circulation, amounting probably to 4,000 a day, and this was confined to Philadelphia. It was an excellent paper; but its reputation in the State was that of heaviness, and it was next to impossible, as was found on trial, to get it into circulation in opposition to the Press

The Evening Bulletin was a devoted Republican paper, and did us good service; but it was an evening paper, and therefore not capable of competing with the Press, which had the field to itself as a morning paper. The consequence was that the party had no means of reaching the people of the State, through the newspaper press, except by forcing the Bulletin and North American into circulation by sending them gratuitiously into the several counties for distribution. Practically the opposition to Hartranft had the field to itself, so far as newspapers were concerned.

The Independent Republicans of that year had a State Committee of their own, with A. K. McClure as its Chairman, a roomy and ostentatious headquarters, and a regular organization throughout the State. It had among its active workers such men as A. G. Curtain, James K. Moorhead, Thomas M. Marshall, and various other gentlemen whose names were as familiar then as they are in the same connection now.

There was, however, one difference between this Independent movement of 1882 and that of 1872. The leaders of 1872 were just as vicious, malignant, malicious and untruthful in their opposition to the regular organization as those of 1882, but the former, while professing to be Independent were openly and decidedly for the Democrats, State and National tickets, instead of, as now, playing into Democrat hands by running a third ticket. They had the manliness, then to occupy their true position, as Democrats in disguise, and did not try to masquerade as Reformers by running a thin ticket for the purpose of promoting Democratic success The difference is to their credit for frankness, of the Independents of '72, Compared with them the Independent leaders of '82 are political sneaks trying to do now by indirection what they then did directly.

The result of the campaign of 1872, glorious as it was, was not apparent or probable until the early fall. With all the direct aid that the Independents then gave to the Democrats, assisted as they were by the bogus Republican and Independent papers of Philadelphia, we carried Hartranft by 35,000 majority. We are no worse off, now, than we were in 1872. We have less to fear now from a third ticket than we had, then, from the Independent vote carried over bodily into the Democratic ranks. Curtin and McClure have since then become Democrats, as all the Independent leaders of to-day will eventually become. By adhering steadfastly to our ticket we shall triumph, now, as gloriously as we did then. All that is needed is a strong, courageous faith in the righteousness of our cause, and an abiding trust in the good judgment of the people. Charlatanry in politics was a failure in 1872, as it will be in 1882.—Exchange.

—Paymaster-General Joseph O. Smith, who is junior to twenty-one others in the pay corps of the Navy, and who was confirmed by the Senate as Chief of Bureau of Provisions and Clothing on Tuesday, is very fond of horses. He is the owner of the great stallion Gold-dust, which is on General Beale's stud farm, in Washington, where General Grant's Arabian horses are kept. He is about forty-two years old, and has been in the service since 1861. When he returned home from his China and Japan cruise in 1878 he had one of the finest collection of curiosities ever seen. Many of them now adorn the houses of Members of Congress. He is said to be a leader in society, and fond of giving dinners.

—A French photographer residing at Tangiers has just been commissioned by the Sultan of Morocco to photograph his 364 wives. The portraits will be contained in an album, of which the Sultan alone will have a key. If the photographer could only manage to strike off some duplicates from the negatives they would probably command a considerable sale.

—Mary Anderson lives a very secluded life at Long Branch. Most of her time is passed in playing with her little stepsister and brothers on the lawn of her pretty place. She rides on horseback a great deal, and sails considerably on the Shrewsbury River. She is never seen at any of the hotels, and goes very little into society.

We'll try the experiment awhile of giving you a little more specific news about goods. We know well, if we can get such news to you promptly, that it will be acceptable. You can write or come.

White muslin dresses at about three-quarters value. A few are shown in the window of 1301 Chestnut, each one marked with its price. Very many more are within.

The materials are nainsooks, linons d'Inde, mulls and Swisses. Some are very plainly made with little or no trimming beyond some deft handling of the material itself; and some are elaborate enough. The extreme prices are $3.50 and $60. An excellent plain dress is sold for $5; neat and well made.

Low prices can almost always be put upon such goods a little late in the season. It's rather early now; but profitable making appears to be over already.

Just now you have the double advantage of many such dresses to choose from and low prices.

1301 and 1303 Chestnut street

Ready-made dresses of a black-and-white striped fabric that looks like summer silk, but is silk-and-cotton. For general wear they will be found quite good enough; better indeed than summer-silk. Well made and substantial; but the chief virtue is in the price, $10.

1301 and 1303 Chestnut street, second floor.

Black grenadines have been one of the most distinguished features of our trade for two months past. We have had the finest in the world, and all grades down to the poorest that we care to keep; and a wonderful variety of patterns.

Figured grenadines that brought $2 lately are selling at $1. And this may be taken as a general indication of what we are doing in grenadines.

Next outer circle, south entrance to main building.

An extraordinary debeige, extraordinary in quality and width, we are selling at 50 cents; 47 inches. No lady who can use debeige will be inclined to pass it; for it is worth twice the money.

The melanges at 40 to 60 cents are worth a half more, just about. There are four qualities, and somewhere about fifty color-effects.

Second circle, southeast from center.

If dress-goods are lower than they were elsewhere—we don't say they are. Advertisements say they are; but there is a certain shyness in those same advertisements, which makes them not very impressive.—If dress-goods are lower elsewhere in our city, the fall is due to the singular spectacle here of three great classes of the most fashionable dress-goods at a fraction of their value: French melanges, small checks and small-check stripes of wool and silk-and-wool, and black lainage.

We mention these three, because they stand out from the rest of the stock, conspicuous in two ways; they are fashionable, peculiarly so; and they are at half. two-thirds or three-quarters value.

Third and fourth circles, south from center.

Sash ribbon, satin-and-grosgrain, 7-inch, of value $1.15 for 75 cents; all colors. We refer to a particular sort, of which we have three thousand yards.

Black moire, 7-inch sash, 90 cents.

Block sash at $1 we are out of part of the time; but we receive some every morning. Do not confound this quality with that sold at 65 cents elsewhere.

Outer circle, by south entrance to main building.

Silk mitts, ordered from the makers a year ago, include a wider range in the colors than ever before: black, 50 cents to $4.50; white, cream, écru, terra-cotta, cardinal, etc., 75 cents to $7.

—Charles E. Scott has been elected Cashier of the Farmers' National Bank.

—The steamboats on the Delaware were crowded with passengers last Sunday

—A number of extra policemen will be appointed to enforce the fireworks ordinance on the 4th of July.

—The Superintendent of the Bristol water works will hereafter prohibit boats from making landing at the water works wharf on Sundays.

—The Burgess has issued his proclamation prohibiting the use and sale of fireworks, and instructing the police officers to enforce the ordinance.

—The Directors of the Farmers' National Bank will meet for discount next week on Monday, as the regular discount day (Tuesday), July 4th, is a legal holiday.

The Presbyterian Church is being repainted. When the organ is placed in position and the interior of the church beautified with fresh paint, it will present an attractive place for Church goers.

—J. A. Emerick & Co of Philadelphia, who purchased recently the farm on Burlington Island, are building a new house and will shortly build a new wharf so that the ferry boat and up river steamers can stop to take up passengers and excursion parties

The citizens of Bristol did not pay their taxes this year with the same avidity that they exhibited last year. On yesterday and the day before, being the two days that the Borough Treasurer receives taxes at the Town House, but a little over $1100 was received. Last year about double that amount was taken.

-A Colored Baptist Church was organized in Bristol on Sunday last. The services were held at Washington Hall. In the afternoon two persons were immersed in the Delaware by the officiating clergyman There was a large number of spectators present to witness the ceremonies but a threatening shower drove many away before the services began.

—The matron of Swarthmore College, Mrs Caroline S. Wood, has been compelled to resign her position on account of her daughter's health. She has occupied the position for the past four years and has, it is said, shown rare executive ability, and greatly endeared herself to the young women under her charge. The college loses in her a most able and efficient member of the faculty.

—On Tuesday a couple of colored men, named William Hill and Joseph Johnson, got into an altercation regarding the division of some money earned in unloading a boat load of coal. In the melee Hill was shot by Johnson in the leg. Johnson was arrested and taken before Esquire Bailey for a hearing, and was required to give bail in the sum of $800 for his appearance at court.

—Thomas Flynn, a stone cutter, and son of Michael Flynn, was killed on the railroad near Cold Spring on Friday morning last. He was walking along the track and on the approach of the Fast Line deliberately threw himself in front of the engine. His body was horribly mangled. The remains were identified in the evening by his father. It is supposed that his death was the result of temporary aberration of mind The coroner held an inquest and a verdict was given in accordance with the facts as stated above.

—The gross earnings of the Pennsylvania railroad last month were not only the largest in the history of the road, but the largest ever known in any month for any single railroad system in the world. They exceeded four millions, and the gross receipts were over $125,000 a day, and the net earnings have been exceeded only twice —Three hundred bushels of strawberries were shipped West from Erie on Monday.

—The following item from the Richmond, (Va.) Dispatch will be read with interest by the many friends in Bristol of Miss Alice Swain —

At 12 o'clock on Thursday, at the residence of Colonel H. D. Whitcomb, Mr. Alexander Hunter, of Alexandria, and Miss Alice Swain were united in marriage, the Rev J. G. Armstrong, D. D., of Monumental church, officiating. The only attendants were Hon. G. A. Mushbach, of Alexandria, and Miss Eva Swain, sister of the bride, who has just completed her musical education at the Philadelphia Academy. From 12 to 4 there was a reception, and a large number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Hunter were present to wish them a long and happy life.

The bride wore a white surah silk, tulle trimmings, and pearl ornaments and niphetos buds.

Kessnich's orchestra, occupying seats beneath trees in the side-yard, discoursed delicious music, and the parlors and dining room of the house were liberally and tastefully decorated with flowers.

Mr. Hunter ("Chasseur") is a journalist, especially well known on account of his racy letters, mostly from Virginia, which have appeared in the Washington Capital and other prominent newspapers. He was at one time a member of the House of Delegates, and Mr. Mushbach was his colleague. Mr. Hunter is a gentleman of decided talent, and his letters descriptive of Virginia scenery and hunting-grounds are quite models in their way It is understood that he has of late been engaged in a literary undertaking of a more serious character than any that has yet engaged his attention.

Miss Swain is the sweet singer of Richmond generally, and of the Monumental church particularly. Her voice has been heard in nearly all the notable musical entertainments given here for some years past, and she has been a willing contributor to many charitable enterprises, the last of which, quite recently, was a benefit for a disabled Confederate soldier. Lovely as is her voice, it is excelled, her intimate friends avow, by the beauties of her character She is quite a treasure to the city, and we will not forgive Mr. Hunter for wooing and winning her, unless, indeed, he concludes to settle down here in Richmond. Either New York or Richmond will be their future home.

The couple left in the afternoon on their bridal tour, going from here to Old Point.

—Philadelphia sends to Newport for the season a young gentleman who has fitted himself out with seventeen suits of clothes, made by the most fashionable tailor in town and all the little necessaries and luxuries which go to make a perfectly dressed man. If this gentleman changes his garments three times a day, he will be able to go through nearly a whole week without putting the same suit on twice. If he chooses to make up suits by wearing his trousers with different coats and vests, the combinations possible will run up into the millions. It is to be hoped that this young gentleman will display as much taste wearing his clothes, and not bring disgrace on the taste of his native city.—Press.

—Ex-Secretary Evarts in a talk before the Yale alumni on Tuesday, scored some points. "We have now reached a stage in the affairs of the country," he said, "when we are able to take up a long-neglected subject—the subject of good government." Intelligent people make the great constituency, and Mr. Evarts declares that the college graduate "cannot shut himself up and complain of the ignorance, caprice and frivolity of his fellow-citizens. He is responsible, armed and equipped as the soldier of civil life, that he be a combatant all through, either in the ditch or at the head"

—A young man of wealthy London parentage came to America to see the Centennial of 1876. Although provided abundantly with money by his father, he lived so riotously that he wanted more, and to get it he went into a scheme of forgery. His trial and conviction did not bring out his real name, and, on going to the Moyamensing prison for five years, he wrote home that he had started on a slow tour around the world, and so might not be heard of in a long time. His recent death divulged the facts.

—About five or six hundred members of the Shenandoah Polish Catholic Church, known as Lithuanians, have petitioned Archbishop Wood, of Philadelphia, for a pastor who can talk their language, the present pastor not being able to understand them. If this request is not complied with they propose to organize and build a church of their own.

—Bucks county people residing in Philadelphia held a meeting on Tuesday night at the Bi-Centennial rooms, corner of 10th and Chestnut streets, to make preparations for the Doylestown Bi-Centennial celebration, which will be held on August 31 and the two first days of September. Various committees were appointed and great interest manifested in the proceedings.

—A strange contagion has broken out among the cattle of Centre county. The victims become stupid, stop eating, the milk dries up and death follows in about five days. A post-mortem examination shows the windpipe inflamed, the lungs filled with corruption and the kidneys enlarged and an accumulation of water in the bowels. Farmers in the Bald Eagle Valley are anxious to discover the cause of the disease and remedy for it.

—At Pittsburgh on Tuesday a German named Weinkoop shot his wife dead, and then cut his throat from ear to ear. The bodies were discovered by a son, who went home to dinner and found his parents lying on the floor in pools of blood.

—The Joliet Iron and Steel Rolling Mills have shut down on account of dull times, throwing 1500 men out of work.

—General Hartranft is recuperating at Norristown from his recent illness.

FORMER SIZE OF SHAD.—A short time ago, says Forest and Stream, we published an account of the shad in Morocco, from a correspondent who said of their size and quality that they far exceed those caught in the United States Among a lot of sixty-four he found one of eleven pounds and not one less than six pounds. He said that he had heard of them of fourteen pounds. Dr. Howell, of the New Jersey Fish Commission, whose memory runs back to an earlier day on the Delaware river than any living intelligent man, says, in commenting on the correspondent's article above mentioned —"The above description answers to the size and character of the Delaware shad before the large ones were fished out, and the meshes of the nets reduced greatly in size In 1820 five hundred and twenty shad salted at Howell's fishery (five miles below Camden) filled ten and a half meat barrels, while, as the shad have run in the last few years, it takes one hundred fish to fill a barrel." The Doctor remembers very well when it was by no means an unusual thing to take shad weighing ten pounds each, but they have declined in size since then as well as in numbers, until about three years ago, since which time there has been a marked increase, so that the shad weighing six and a-half pounds each, which were extremely rare six or eight years ago, are quite frequently taken now, and there have been some taken this year, as well as last, weighing seven and a-half to eight pounds each."

—The Bank of England covers nearly five acres, and includes most of a parish, with the churchyard now known in bank parlance as "the Garden," and a very neat little garden it is. Long after it had ceased to be a burial ground, an ancient servant of the bank, of amazing stature, was buried there for safe keeping by request of his friends, who feared that some enterprising museum would go for his skeleton. The bank occupies the site also of the house and garden of Mr. Houblon, its first Governor, a Huguenot, of exemplary character, whose very wealthy descendants hold the estates he bought near London. The first Deputy Governor, Mr. Godfrey, nephew of the unfortunate Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey—not Sir Edmondsbury, as it is usually written—a famous magistrate, murdered in the Titus Oates days, was killed at the siege of Namur, whither he had gone on bank business, having insisted on accompanying William III. to the trenches. The bank is guarded by a detachment of the Foot Guards, who take possession about 5 o'clock every evening The officer on guard is allowed a handsome dinner for himself and two friends, with plenty of wine, but the friends have to depart at 11 o'clock. The men do not know who will be on the bank guard, so collusion is impossible. The building has no external windows, and contains acres of vaults In the day time it is guarded by its own porters, and by policemen, many of them in plain clothes, who are always on the watch.

THE FUTURE OF ALASKA.—With a comparatively mild climate throughout the archipelago, with most valuable ship-building timber covering the islands, with a cedar that now sells at one hundred and fifty dollars a thousand feet in Sitka, with splendid harbors, with inexhaustible fisheries, with an abundance of coal, and the probability that veins of copper, lead, silver and gold await the prospector, with the possibility of raising sufficient garden vegetables, and with wild cranberry swamps on nearly every island, with all these advantages it is surprising that an industrious, amphibious, shipbuilding, fishing colony from New England, or other States, has not established itself in Alaska. One drawback is that Congress has not yet organized a territorial government, but when this region shall have been opened up to individual enterprise and settlement it will then be discovered that Alaska is a valuable possession.—July Century.

—The strike of the freight handlers in New York and Jersey City is causing great annoyance and loss to merchants and shippers. The freight rooms of the various railroad companies are nearly all closed and a vast amount of perishable merchandise remains upon the cars, the companies being unable to unload it. As yet there has been but little violence, but in Jersey City, where trouble seemed imminent, the authorities have taken precautions in case of riot. The strike among the iron workers in Pittsburgh and the West still continues, though it is liable to terminate any day.

—A fire at Lawrence, Mass., Friday night, destroyed the store house of the Pacific Mills. The building contained dyes, chemicals, partly manufactured fabric, 300,000 pounds of wool, and 2,000 bales of cotton. The total loss is estimated at nearly $1,000 000. W. A. Hodges and George Remick were taken out of the building suffocated by smoke.

—A Philadelphia society has undertaken to close the beer gardens of that city on Sundays, and, instead of dealing first with the disreputable ones, has proceeded against a rather fashionable resort. The excuse for this is that, by shutting up such a place at the outset, the rest of the job will be made easy.

—Jane Johnson, the "wickedest woman in England," has been converted. She is eighty-four year of age, and has been in the Leed, prison two hundred and forty times, and nearly as many times in other jails. She is now preaching in Hull.

—The first lot of this year's Virginia wheat was received Friday in Petersburg and held at $1.50 a bushel. Reports from all parts of the State say the wheat crop is the best known there for years.

DELEVAN, Wis., Sept. 24, 1878.
GENTS—I have taken not quite one bottle of the Hop Bitters. I was a feeble old man of 78 when I got it. To-day I am as active and feel as well as I did at 80. I see a great many that need such a medicine. D. BOYCE.

—The Summer number of Strawbridge & Clothier's Quarterly, just received, furnishes the ladies with many well illustrated articles on subjects of interest to them, such as fashion, home art, and of domestic economy. Besides the usual gossip on fashion, which is supplemented later on in the book by hundreds of illustrations, there are instructive articles telling how things should be done. "How to Shop," treats of an art that all ladies practice; "Dress Making" will be read with profit, "House Furnishing" gives much practical advice that is worth following, and seasonable "Hints on Bathing" are given. In addition to which may be learned, how to make dress caps, how various articles are embroidered, how to be well dressed, and how to stain glass From the "Care of Children" knowledge may be gained that is of great use in emergencies. The serio-comic "Tale of a Trunk," is worth listening to; and the full page of illustrations should be carefully examined so that none of the "points" of the artist be overlooked. The "Kettle-Drum Racquet," is an easy and melodious piece of instrumental music that will prove a permanent addition to the class to which it belongs. The frontispiece represents a pair of lovers in a lane, and will be pleasantly suggestive to all. Strawbridge & Clothier's Quarterly is published at fifty cents a year, by Strawbridge & Clothier, Eighth and Market streets, Philadelphia.

PROHIBITION IN IOWA.—The political contest which has just closed in Iowa shows that the temperance party in that State are in the majority, and that in the future the banner State of the Republican party in the West means that "rum mills" shall take a back seat and shall not control its politics. In the eastern cities the "gin mills" are all but supreme. They in a great measure nominate and elect the Congressmen who go to Washington and the Aldermen who control our great municipal interests. The spirit and courage of the Republican party of Iowa in endeavoring to emancipate itself from the baleful control of this class cannot be too highly praised. It may be that, as in the case of Maine, the party is making a mistake, that prohibition is a plant whose shade kills everything, good, bad and indifferent, beneath it, but at the same time it must be admitted that the restrictions it imposes are in the interest of good government. It is a curious fact that the distinctively republican States are the commonwealths in which laws of this character in the interest of public morality are deemed to be necessary.—New York Herald.

—When the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was preparing his famous "Lecture to Young Men," he held a long interview with one of the most notorious gamblers in the country, and then used the information about gambling and gambling dens, obtained from him in his wonderfully realistic discourse on that subject. After the delivery of the lecture a "too-previous" young man tried to turn the laugh on Mr. Beecher, by asking him how he could describe a gambling hell so accurately, if he never had been in one. "If you never have been in one yourself," retorted Mr. Beecher, "how do you know my description is accurate?"

—The doctrine of sinless perfection was discussed in the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, lately held at Huntsville, Ala. Some congregations of this denomination have gone as far as the Free Methodists in professions of perfect living. A revision committee advised that liberty of conscience be allowed on that subject, but by a large vote the following was adopted "The doctrine of sinless perfection is not authorized by the Scriptures, and is a dogma of dangerous tendency"

—It is stated upon good authority, says an exchange, that William Bennett, who lost his life in the Alta mine on Friday night while endeavoring to rescue the seven missing miners, made his last will a few moments before descending into the mine. He was fully alive to the great dangers that awaited him, but his stout and noble heart prompted him to risk his life to save that of others.

—The body of John Darmstadt, the builder of the large bridge on the Long Branch Division of the New Jersey Central railroad, was found in the Shrewsbury river, near the bridge at Red Bank on Wednesday morning. There were four deep knife cuts in the breast and stomach. Justice Erle impanelled a jury and will hold an inquest. Investigation shows that Darmstadt undoubtedly killed himself. He arose at half-past 4 o'clock in the morning and walked to the river dressed only in his underclothing. He stabbed himself four times, and then threw himself, face downward, in ten feet of water.

MISCELLANEOUS

Upset Sale,

Commenced June 1st.

Scotch people and old-time folks all know what is the meaning of an "upset sale." It is a term used when things are to be sold out to close estates, partnerships, etc.

We propose a sale of this nature. The prosperous season so far this year, the largest we have ever had, encourages us to

Ring all the Bells, and call the people in to close out, before the 4th of July, all of the $750,000 of Men's & Boys' Clothing.

We want to sell out to make purchases for fall.
We want to sell out to keep plenty of work going.
We want to sell out to make some changes.
We want to sell out to start again with a new stock.
We want to sell out to do a larger business than ever.

We never stop at anything to carry out our plans when we are in the right, and if the prices must be cut down,

to gather the people,

Down go the prices.

Even if we sacrifice our profits for one month, the people have done generously by us for many years, and we are satisfied.

IN A NUT-SHELL, THIS IS IT.

The practical point of all this is a radical reduction in prices from June 1st. They are cut, some ten, some twenty, some thirty per cent., and some, on goods prepared specially for this sale, not at all. Compared with April 1st the average deduction is twenty-five per cent. Of the $750,000 merchandise now held by us, about $500,000 is involved in this sale. From the great list which might be made we only quote three items to-day, namely:

3000 pairs of men's Cassimere Pantaloons, made and making, strong, neat, durable, lately worth $3.50 now $2.42.

600 men's suits, real standard Sawyer's Cassimere, made and making, late price $15.00 now $12.50.

750 men's suits, eight styles, every garment freshly made, some of them sold freely at $12.00, $9.25.

Our intent to-day is simply to tell all the people that quick trade prices are on all our clothing for this sale.

GROWTH OF CENTURY PLANTS.—Quite a number of century plants, in various portions of the State, are throwing up stalks preparatory to blooming. One upon a ranch in Sonoma valley, on the west side near the foothills, grew six feet in eight days, or three-eighths of an inch per hour, which is a fair sample of the rapidity of flower stem development in these interesting plants. At Petaluma two plants are about to bloom, and will be in their prime next week. A mammoth century plant, which has been for years on a farm in the San Gabriel valley, will blossom soon. The plant spreads over a circle forty-eight feet in circumference. The flower stem is expected to become forty or more feet high before it completes its growth. Eight or ten other cases are reported in other parts of the State. The century plant will, in California, bloom in eight or ten years after being planted. The Mexicans make an intoxicating drink, pulque, from the sap, and its manufacture is said to be very profitable. From the leaves a hemp-like fiber is obtained.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A REMARKABLE GAS WELL.—The well finished in April last by the Niagara Oil Company, in Washington county, Pa., is one of the greatest gassers of modern drilling days. The sands found were not regular, nor as expected, neither did they appear to be oil-bearing. After a six months' struggle with the drill, a depth of 2,200 feet was reached, when a vein of gas was struck which threw the tools clear out of the hole, and more than fifty feet above the top of the derrick. The strength of the gas can be imagined when it is known that the tools weigh about 800 pounds. All work was then out of the question, as the gas made such a roaring noise that the drillers had to go away from the well fully 300 yards before being able to make themselves understood. The company have expended already more than $20,000, and have nothing to show for their money but leases of 60,000 acres of land and the great gas-blower. The well is eight miles north of Washington, Pa., in Mt. Pleasant township. It is just 22 miles from Pittsburgh, and may be utilized by the latter city in case the supply does not become exhausted soon.

I TOLD YOU SO.—An old lady who was in the habit of boasting, after the occurrence of any event, that she had predicted it, was one day cleverly "sold" by her worthy spouse, who had got tired of hearing her eternal "I told you so." Rushing into the house, breathless with excitement, he dropped into a chair, elevated his hands and exclaimed: "Oh, my dear, what do you think? The old cow has gone and eaten up our grindstone!" The old lady was ready, and hardly waiting to hear the last word, she screamed out at the top of her lungs: "I told you so. I told you so. You always would let it stand out of doors."

The Oil and Drug News says that a nearly bald servant of Mr. Stevens, a British Consul, used, after trimming lamps, to rub his hands on his head, and after three months had a much finer head of glossy black hair than ever before. Mr. Stevens tried the experiment on animals which had lost their, with equal success. The petroleum should be of the most refined quality, and should be rubbed in vigorously and quickly with the palm of the hand, six or seven times, at intervals of three days, except in case of horses' tails and manes, when more application may be needed.

Getting it down fine: On the occasion of Sarah Bernhardt's return to London the Times said she looked "worse and even thinner than before." This reminds us of the German composer who was conducting one of his overtures. As the horns played too loud he told them repeatedly to play softer, and softer they played each time. At the fourth repetition, with a knowing wink at each other, they put their instrument to their lips but did not blow at all. The conductor nodded approvingly: "Very good, indeed. Now one shade softer and you'll have it."—New York Evening Post.

☞ Thousands of ladies to-day cherish grateful remembrances of the help derived from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It positively cures all female complaints. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western avenue, Lynn, Mass., for pamphlets.

When a convict in Sing Sing prison fails to iron twelve shirts a day, he is invited to "come over to the keeper's office and get paddled." It's a message that takes all the starch out of him.

A Boston literary newspaper receives from its writer of English news this intelligence: "You say that almost nothing is known about Tennyson in America. Almost nothing is known about him in England. I never saw him in my life." The frankness which prompts this latter avowal, as if offering a convincing proof that little is known of Tennyson in England, is followed by a report that the poet "has taken a house in Eaton Place, and is giving dinner parties, and behaving like an ordinary human being, I imagine it is his first appearance in that character."

The gilded youth of the day, as described by Truth, wear exceedingly high trousers, well defined waists, slightly suggestive of corsets, hats with curved brims, very tall collars, very light ties, and a white flower placed very near their estimable chins. Their boots taper at the toes to points so sharp as to defy nature and encourage chiropodists.

☞ WHY WOMEN USE IT.—Because they have learned by experience that it overcomes despondency, indigestion, weakness in the back and other troubles of the sex is why women everywhere use Parker's Ginger Tonic.—Home Journal.

The largest telescope ever designed is now in process of construction at the works of Alvah Clark & Sons, at Cambridgeport, Mass. The instrument is intended for use at the Lick Observatory, California, and will cost $50,000. It will have a 36-inch object glass. The largest one previously designed was a 30-inch glass for the Pultowa Observatory, Russia. The Government observatory at Washington has a 26-inch instrument.

☞ An article so favorably known as Hall's Hair Renewer needs no words of praise from us. It has won its way to the highest favor in the public mind, and multitudes who have vainly used other preparations have, on trying this, been made glad by the speedy restoration of abundant locks as in the days of youth.

The Governors of States where the death penalty is in force hang to Friday with a superstition that makes one wonder if they spit over their shoulder when they see a white horse.—Detroit Free Press.

☞ PERSONAL! TO MEN ONLY!—The Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich., will send Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts and Electric Appliances on trial for thirty days to men (young or old) who are afflicted with Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality and Manhood, and kindred troubles, guaranteeing speedy and complete restoration of health and manly vigor. Address as above. N. B.—No risk is incurred, as thirty days trial is allowed.

THE GHETTO.—Every one had heard of the Ghetto, running along the banks of the yellow Tiber. It is one of the most interesting Jewish quarters in the world. There isn't as much of the curious here as in the quarters of this same strange race in Prague; but an undying interest clusters around the old walls and houses here which surpasses all others. It is about the only place in all the city which hasn't changed its face since the day when St. Paul took up his abode in this very street, and very probably in the house which the inhabitants point out as his. Far back in the ages, when the Romans were not all beggars or cripples, this quarter was a fish market, and continued so until quite requently. It was also the Jews' "prison," for at sunset the Jew of old had to seek his home. It was then that the gates were closed until sunrise and he came forth with his head swathed in a yellow bandage which Paul IV. compelled him to wear. 'Tis running the gauntlet now to pass through the little winding streets, for a legion of small children completely surround one, and in long practiced tones of sorrow say they are hungry and poor. You don't doubt the assertion as you look around and see the sights of wretchedness, gaze into the cold damp cellars such as are found in warm countries only, and see women and children half-clad lying on the ground. All of the ordinary duties toilette are performed in the street. Lamented Darwin might have found another argument in his favorite doctrine if he had seen these people looking for puces a la singe.—Rome Cor. Philadelphia Bulletin.

PAUPER BARONETS.—I have always wondered why people are so anxious to become baronets. A Peerage secures a seat in the Upper House, and this, one can imagine, is an object of ambition to some. The knighthood of an order is a personal distinction. But what can it benefit anyone to know that his son and grandson will be called "Sir?" This title, if there be no wealth to support it, is an encumbrance, and not unfrequently an absurdity. The late Sir Harry Wraxall, Bart., was a pauper in the Wandsworth Lunatic Asylum, and the present Baronet was educated at a work-house school, and is apprenticed to a pawnbroker. If baronetcies are to be continued, it might be well to allow their sale. The "Sir" is of no use to the pawnbroker's assistant, but if he were permitted to put it to auction many a vulgar idiot of my acquaintance would be ready to pay several thousand pounds for it.—London Truth.

The Chemiker Zeitung comments at length upon the proposed "denaturalization of alcohol," a subject which is receiving much attention abroad. The idea is to render spirit undrinkable on the one hand, while at the same time preserving its qualities for use in the various industries. Manufacturers think it unjust to require them to pay the tax on alcohol as is required from those who use it in beverages, while the European Governments know that it will not do to let them have it its present state free of tax. So the chemists now have the rather difficult problem before them of so changing or "denaturalizing" the spirit that it cannot be used as a beverage, but will be as useful as heretofore in all the industrial arts.

What it Did for an Old Lady.

Coshocton Station, N. Y., Dec. 28, '78.

GENTS—A number of people have been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case a lady of over seventy years had been sick for years, and for the past ten years had not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail, I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbors, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use.

W. B. HATHAWAY, Agt. U. S. Ex. Co.

Caleb Duffinger, of Unionville, Ohio, vaccinated himself about ten days ago with virus taken from the arm of a neighbor who was formerly of intemperate habits. The vaccination took rapidly, and they do say that the way Caleb had delirium tremens was something to sour the milk in the cellar.—Boston Post.

"All that I Desired."

H. H. Warner & Co.: Sirs—I have used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for disease, and it certainly did for me all that could have been expected and all that I desired. BENJ. F. CHAMNEY.

A New York daily, a few days ago, spoke of a woman being "stabbed by a sick husband with a broken leg." This is a species of brutality that cannot be too strongly denounced. A stab-wound inflicted with a broken leg is more apt to terminate in lockjaw than a cut made with a knife.—Norristown Herald.

☞ I have been a Hay Fever sufferer for three years, and have often heard Ely's Cream Balm spoken of in the highest terms, but did not take much in it because of the many quick medicines. A friend persuaded me to try the Balm, and with the most wonderful success. This recommention you can use for the benefit of Hay Fever sufferer. T. S. Geer, Syracuse, N. Y. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger.

He paused: "Pause," said the highly cultivated Boston girl to her lover, who was about to kill a mosquito. "Pause: In the balanced and admirably adapted economy of nature man cannot interfere without disarranging the whole order of things." And he paused.—Boston Advertiser.

☞ ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN.—The wise man is prepared for such happenings by keeping always on hand a bottle of Phenol Sodique, the great remedy for hurts, scalds, burns, cuts, etc. For sale by druggists and general storekeepers. See adv.

"What's the crowd about?" queried a stranger, as he noticed a stream of visitors going into a fashionable residence. "It's a silver weddin'," obligingly replied his informant. "What's silver weddin'?" "Why, a chap's been married twenty-five times, and he's a celebratin' of it."

☞ There is no use in drugging yourself to death, and buying all the vile medicines for internal use when you can be cured of fever and ague, dumb ague, billious disorders, jaundice, dyspepsia as well as all disorders and ailments of the liver, blood and stamach, by wearing one of Prof. Guilmette's French Liver Pads, which is a sure cure every time. If your druggist does not keep the pad, send $1.50 in a letter to French Pad Co., Toledo, O., and it will be sent you by return mail. It is the only Pad that is guaranteed to cure. Beware of counterfeits. H. G. Peters agent, Bristol, Pa.

☞ Pursell's Porous Plasters are the best.

CATCHING A CRAB.—They tell a story of a would-be funny broker, who last season adopted a most fiendish method of getting even with one of the chronic flirts who are said to make the piazzas here lively later in the season. He obtained half a dozen energetic crabs from the fishing beach, and, watching for an opportunity when no one was in a particular tank, except the inconsistant fair object of his vengeance, he dropped in the crustaceans (way up term for crabs). The young lady continued her natatorial exercises, (jam up for paddling) a few minutes longer, when she suddenly uttered a blood-curling shriek, and was helped up the ladder with a crab hanging on to her pink little toe. She had several consecutive epileptic fits while the marine corn doctor was being removed. The Mephistophelean glee of the broker, however, gave him away, and for fear of some counter trick he decided to bathe early in the morning thereafter. A few days after that the bath house keeper was startled by some terrific yells, and, hastily entering the tank house, he beheld the broker floundering out with a big, jagged-toothed spring rat trap clenched on his heel.

"Who the devil put this horrible thing in the water?" roared the broker.

"I did, sir," sweetly replied the crabbed young lady aforementioned, stepping out of a bath room. "I put it there to catch those horrid crabs, you know."

The broker went home on a crutch.—San Francisco Post.

THE DELAWARE PEACH CROP.—An immense fruit crop is promised in the Maryland and Delaware Peninsula, which will compensate in part for the partial shortage consequent upon cold weather in the early part of the season at the West. A Wilmington despatch says the peach yield this season, from present appearances, will be "phenomenal." I. N. Mills, Superintendent of the Delaware Division of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad, who is said to know more about the outlook than anyone else, because he has to transport the fruit to market, says that, from the way thinks look now, the crop may exceed the superabundant one of 1875, when in the height of the season there was a constant glut and thousands of baskets of peaches rotted under the trees. In that year the railroad and steamboat lines were unable to carry the peaches to market, and the growers were almost as badly off as when there is only a very slight crop. This year, however, not so much trouble of this kind will be experienced, as there are numerous canning factories now in operation, which will probably be able to use up all the peaches that cannot be taken to market in their fresh state.—From John H. Davis & Co.'s New York Circular.

Somewhat puzzled: Last winter a great religious revival who held in a certain Ohio neighborhood, and several good men brought all their influence to bear on a certain farmer named Harris. After many efforts he was brought to the anxious seat, and then they had the happiness of hearing him announce that he felt himself saved. In the course of three or four days the minister met him and asked: "Well, brother Harris, how do you feel?" "Oh, kinder plaguey mean," was the reply. "You do? What is the trouble?" "Well, I hadn't found the Lord over 20 minutes before I run across a fruit tree agent who beat me out of $15 last year. There I was, ready to fly into the gates of heaven, and there he was, chuckling to think of how he worked off a lot of crab-apple trees on me for a new kind of pear! I couldn't even break his neck, and the old woman she got in and said I was allus gittin' in a box, and the hull thing has sorter stirred me up till I can't say whether I'd rather lick a lightning rod man or be angel."—Wall Street News.

☞ DELICATE FEMALES.—The exactions of society, added to the cares of maternity and the household, have tested beyond endurance the frail constitutions which have been granted the majority of women. To combat this tendency to premature decline, no remedy in the world possesses the nourishing and strengthening properties of Malt Bitters. They enrich the blood, perfect digestion, stimulate the liver and kidneys, arrest ulcerative weaknesses, and purify and vitalize every function of the female system.

Did he steal the dog? "Yes, Judge," said the prisoner, "I admit that the back of my trousers were tangled in the dog's teeth and that I dragged the animal away, but if you call that stealing a dog no man on earth is safe from committing crime."—Poston Post.

☞ The most wonderful curative remedies of the present day, are those that come from Germany, or at least originate there. The most recent preparation placed upon the market in this country, is the Great German Invigorator, which has never been known to fail in curing a single case of impotency, spermatorrhœa, weakness and all diseases resulting from self-abuse, as nervous debility, inability, mental anxiety, languor, lassitude, depression of spirits and functional derangements of the nervous system. For sale by druggists, or sent free by mail on receipt of the price, $1.00 per box, or six boxes for $5.00. Address F. J. Cheney, Toledo, O., Sole Agent for the United States. Send for circular. H. Dyspepsia! Dyspepsia!!

CURED! CURED!!

Apepsia! Apepsia!!

The great scientific preparation will positively cure old, chronic cases of Dyspepsia, Dyspeptic Fits, Dyspeptic Vertigo, where every known medicine has failed to give relief. I refer to a few of the cases pronounced incurable that have been cured with

APEPIA!

H. A. Clark, firm of Clark Bros. & Co., Philadelphia, was given up by our most eminent physicians and was cured with only three bottles of Apepsia. Been well over one year.

Miss Katie Hoffman, 872 Randolph St., Philadelphia, was a case of Dyspepsia Consumption, given up to die by our best physicians, but was cured with Apepsia.

Matthew Robinson, 803 N. 21st Street, Phila. This was a very dangerous case of Dyspeptic Vertigo of long standing, but cured with two bottles of Apepsia.

Dr. Samuel W. Adams, of New York City, writes me his wife has been cured with Apepsia—one of the worst cases in the known world.

Dr. Adams is now using Apepsia in his practice without a failure in a single case. The second dose gives perfect relief, from two to three bottles cured the worst cases in existence.

The Little Giant

POCKET SCALES.

The Greatest Invention of the Age.
Something for Everybody.

A new invention of rare merit, which must not be classed with the cheap, miserable affairs that are now flooding the country. "THE LITTLE GIANT POCKET SCALE," is a neat and useful article, which in time will throw all the old fogy scales and balances into the shade. They weigh ACCURATELY from one ounce to eight pounds. Carefully built and constructed by skillful workmen, they will give the best satisfaction wherever introduced. For beauty and workmanship they take the lead. Heavily plated with nickel silver, they cannot tarnish or rust. These scale are so small and portable that they can be easily carried in the vest pocket and occupies no more space than a small pocket knife. These scales are DURABLE, STRONG and ACCURATE, and with ordinary usage will last a lifetime without getting out of order, as they are built upon an entirely new principle, which the inventor spent nearly two years in perfecting. They are pronounced by NED BUNTLINE, (E. Z. C. Judson,) and other leading American sportsmen to be superior to any scale heretofore imported from Europe, and they should be seen to be appreciated. Just the thing for Sportsmen, Trappers Hunters, Agents, Travellers, and Family use, in fact, "SOMETHING FOR EVERYBODY." No dealer in the world can give you a scale equal to the "LITTLE GIANT" for five times the price asked. The pattern is neatly constructed and finely finished. Every Scale we send out is in perfect order and are warranted so or money refunded every time. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case. these Scales are no "catch-penny" affair but something both good and useful to every person in the land.

AGENTS WANTED!

Everybody to sell these Scales in all sections of the country, as you will find them the fastest selling article on record. "BIG DISCOUNTS" are offered to agents, dealers and the trade. Our motto is "Live and Let Live," "Quick Sales and Small Profits." Circulars, terms, and full particulars sent free to any address. One sample Scale, put up in a neat case, sent by mail to any address on receipt of 50c. (3-cent postage stamps taken, or you can send a ONE DOLLAR BILL and we will send you three scales) Address all orders to

Foo Choo's Balsam of Shark's Oil

Positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness Known.

This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear What the Deaf Say!

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

"Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to HAYLOCK & JENNEY, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1.00, and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—Editor of Mercantile Review.

☞ To avoid loss in the Mails, please send money by Registered Letter.

Only imported by HAYLOCK & JENNEY, (Late HAYLOCK & Co.) 7 Dey Street, New York.
